Report description:

Rising unit prices will be one of the main drivers for the value growth in pet products during 2022. Retailers are having to increase prices to cope with growing production costs, commodity prices, and more expensive logistics and distribution costs. However, the steep inflation will damage volume sales, as, unlike pet food, some pet products are considered non-essential. This means that consumers can cut back on their spending. For example, whilst the value sales of pet accessories will benefit...
