Report description:

Having performed particularly strongly during 2021, as the rate of COVID-19 infections in the country spiked, retail constant value sales (2022 prices) of analgesics exhibited a marginal decline in 2022. A sharp fall in the incidence of the virus was the main driver of this. However, demand was supported to a degree by a spike in cases during the early part the year. Moreover, even many of those who did not contract the virus sought to stockpile analgesics as a precautionary measure.
