Report description:

Overall demand for analgesics in Ireland has fallen in 2022, with the majority of categories set to contract in volume terms. This is partly the result of stockpiling that occurred in the first two years of the pandemic, particularly during the initial waves in 2020 and again in late 2021, when infections surged. Having accumulated substantial supplies during these periods, many households have since had less need than usual to purchase analgesics. Demand has been further subdued by the country'...
