Report description:

Baby food is expected to register current value growth in 2022. However, much of this value growth is expected to be driven by price rises, fuelled by several factors, including rising energy prices. Also, retail volume growth is expected to be higher compared to the previous year. Many couples decided to delay having babies during the COVID-19 pandemic. As we are gradually entering a post-pandemic era, with social distancing measures lifted, there is a rise in the birth rate in 2022. That said,...
