Report description:

In 2022, retail volume sales of butter and spreads are set to decline due to the reduction in cooking at home as consumers return to more normal lifestyles, including eating at consumer foodservice outlets, in the wake of the COVID-19 crisis. However, the category is set to grow in value because of the significant increase in unit prices reflecting the wider steep rise in inflation, with raw material prices and overall transportation and production costs seeing sharp increases. On the other hand...
