Report description:

Dietary supplements are expected to register moderate current value growth in 2022, but constant value growth is expected to fall significantly. In fact, dietary supplements are expected to register the steepest fall in constant value sales of all consumer health products in 2022. One reason for the weak performance is that concerns around the virus have abated, and many consumers purchased dietary supplement to build up their immune system and protect them from infection during the peak of the...
