Report description:

Probiotic supplements have grown rapidly over the past few years and have seen their sales further augmented by the pandemic thanks to their various functions, the main one of which is fortifying the immune system. Its growth is also underpinned by the fact that Taiwanese consumers have long been careful about digestive health, due to the country's strong dining-out culture and the fact that colon cancer is the highest of all cancers in the country. The ability of probiotics to help prevent cons...
