Report description:

In October 2021, melatonin, popularly known as the "sleep hormone", was authorised in Brazil by ANVISA, the Brazilian health agency. This substance was approved as a food supplement with a daily intake of 0.21mg. In addition, the product's label or description must display a disclaimer stating that the product should not be consumed by pregnant women, children, lactating women, or people involved in activities that require constant focus. The agency also advises that people with other conditions...
