Report description:

Retail sales of analgesics were positively impacted by the emergence of the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020, with a surge in demand for all product types, as consumers resorted to stockpiling during successive lockdowns and quarantines, amid fears over future supplies. As in 2021, analgesics saw slower growth in current value terms in 2022, as consumer fears over the pandemic began to wane. However, demand remained buoyant, due to the staple nature of such products. Analgesics tend to be purchased in...
