Report description:

Mobile phones continue their declining volume trend in 2022, with supply disruptions from China compounding the issues and with feature phones continuing to head towards obsoletion due to such models being outdated. Even before the onset of the pandemic, sales of mobile phones had begun to decline, primarily due to saturation and a trend towards longer replacement cycles. During 2020, these challenges were compounded by the economic shock of the pandemic, which weighed on consumer confidence and...
