Report description:

As the COVID-19 pandemic has largely receded as the chief driver of growth, the global market for consumer health in 2022 has instead responded to a swift rise in global inflation, shortages to ingredients and raw materials, and bottlenecks in shipping. Together, these stifled real growth for the industry and wiped away gains from the rebounding demand for cough and cold remedies, sustained interest in sports nutrition, and the rise of lifestyle-orientated vitamins and dietary supplements.
