Report description:

Sales of butter and spreads registered a steep increase in 2020, as consumers spent more time at home under quarantine, giving them time to prepare home-made meals. Furthermore, consumers did not only use these products as spreads but also as ingredients in home cooking. The gradual relaxation of quarantine measures and the return of many consumers to the workplace or students to educational institutions slowed retail demand in 2021, as consumption habits started normalising. However, the intere...
