Report description:

Sales of dietary supplements continue to be supported by demand for immunity support. After two years of significantly low rates of influenza in Australia, there has been a resurgence in 2022 due to an easing of restrictions and greater contact with others, encouraging consumers to search for products that can help strengthen their immune systems. At the same time, there was a surge in COVID-19 cases earlier in the year in Australia, which has further supported the demand for dietary supplements...
