Report description:

Supply chain issues, and increasing prices of raw materials, including wheat, have caused significant price increases on all staple food products in 2022. Gas, electricity, and property tax have also increased in 2022, which has had a strong impact on the packaged food landscape, with production costs rising. While local consumers protested when major players announced price hikes, smaller companies, like Neto, increased prices without many consumers noticing. However, these price hikes have cau...
