Report description:

The closure or restrictions on the operations of store-based retail distribution channels limited access to writing instruments at the height of the pandemic in 2020, although there was a slight shift towards e-commerce as retailers and players attempted to maintain supply demand to help offset steep in-store revenue losses. Nevertheless, growth was also damaged by the closure of schools and offices, with demand for writing instruments such as pens, pencils and colouring limited by a switch to h...
