Report description:

The already prominent health and wellness trend received a boost from the experiences of the COVID-19 crisis, both because of concerns about the immediate threat from the disease and because of awareness of the poor diets and sedentary lifestyles associated with periods of lockdown. In particular, the crisis reinforced concerns about obesity, which was identified as a risk factor in terms of severe outcomes from COVID-19 and was also on the rise as a result of home seclusion. In this context, pe...
