Report description:

There was a spike in demand for packaging unit volumes in baby food when the pandemic hit the country in 2020, with only liquid milk formula seeing a worse year-on-year performance, likely given the fact that the need for this convenient on-the-go product was somewhat diminished due to mobility restrictions. Growth in demand for other baby food and dried baby food was particularly strong in 2020, as some parents stocked up on these products during the early stages of the pandemic due to fears of...
