Report description:

The COVID-19 pandemic stimulated strong unit volume growth in processed fruit and vegetables in 2020. As consumers remained in home seclusion for much of the year, and consumer foodservice outlets were either closed or only offered limited services for much of the year, at-home consumption increased considerably. As consumers ate and prepared more meals at home, so demand for products in processed fruit and vegetables increased. The arrival of COVID-19 also caused consumers to panic, especially...
