Report description:

2020 and the first half of 2021 marked the worst impact of the pandemic in Brazil, with more restrictive and longer periods of isolation. During this time, local consumers sought to optimise their visits to retailers and chose products that they perceived as more hygienic, such as ready meals and soup, to reduce contamination. In addition, with more hectic work and study routines at home, Brazilians sought more convenient and practical meal solutions. In 2022, restrictive measures have been most...
