Report description:

As noted in other basic daily consumption products, the long periods of social isolation during the pandemic resulted in Brazilians eating more frequently at home, leading to a historically strong performance for sauces, dips and condiments in 2020, with retail volume growth continuing into 2021. During the most acute period of social isolation, Brazilians developed the habit of cooking more at home, leading to a greater focus on health and more specifically, the direct relationship of their ove...
