Report description:

Consumers were becoming increasingly cautious with their disposable income in 2022, reducing spending and trading down where possible. Before inflation hit, it was estimated that around 30% of households' income was spent on food only, but in 2022 this figure increased, and as such, cuts and savings have to be prioritised from other areas of the budget, such as home care. This was especially the case for non-essential categories of goods, such as specific toilet care goods.
