Report description:

The Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) buildings and construction sheets market is anticipated to witness a CAGR of approximately 3% during the forecast period (2022-2027).

The COVID-19 pandemic has had an impact on the market since demand from the building and construction, automotive and transportation, electrical and electronics, and aerospace and defense industries decreased. The pandemic has had a negative impact on new construction and aftermarket. Construction activities were initially stopped completely, but in 2021, they were given permission to resume operations using COVID-19 safety measures. After unlocking, the major obstacles in the sector are labor availability and raw material supply and costs. The pandemic has had a negative influence on the raw material sector, which is projected to slow the growth of the building and construction sheets market.

Rising demand for construction sheets in automotive, construction, and other applications in emerging countries is likely to boost market revenue. Market expansion is aided by a high demand for construction sheets in a variety of applications, as well as high-performance construction sheets. Over the period, increased R&D activity in the creation of low-carbon plastics is likely to contribute to the target market's revenue growth.

The need for roofing solutions has increased as the number of construction projects has increased in the residential development sectors. As a result, the construction sheets market is expected to develop due to an increase in demand for transparent roofing goods from the building and construction industry. The building and construction sector is expected to be the largest end-use industry segment of the construction sheets market. Construction sheets have favorable physical features such as improved ductility, high strength, and outstanding homogeneity.
