Report description:

The COVID-19 pandemic had a net positive impact on the US gutter guards market. In 2020 as in United States home renovations projects in grew the pandemic's lockdowns, shelter-in-place rules, and general lack of anything to do outside of one's own residence led many people to look at their homes in a new harsh light.

By 2025, demand for gutter guards in the United States is expected to rise 2.5% yearly to USD 746 million, or 362.4 million linear feet. While increasing the use of higher-value products in the residential market - which accounts for the vast majority of sales - will boost value gains, the large number of units installed in 2020 and 2021 during the COVID-19 pandemic era's surging home renovation activity will limit future installations.

Advance supports by gutter guardsd are the replacement of older or worn gutter guards, often as part of gutter and downspout repair and replacement projects. Growing interest in value-added gutter and downspout products and materials for their enhanced aesthetic appeal, such as copper hoods and covers

US Gutter Guards Market Trends

The Aging US population is driving the market

The United States of America is one of the world's most populous countries, trailing only China and India. A total population of around 320 million people and a more-or-less constant population growth rate over the last decade show that the country's living conditions and standards have continuously improved. As the population in United States is aging and the life expectancy is also increasing, many older consumers will not want to get on ladders and clean gutters and will opt to add gutter guards as a more permanent solution to the problem

Rainwater Harvesting Represents an Opportunity for Gutter Guard

Growing interest in rainwater harvesting provides growth opportunities for rainware companies and contractors that are diversifying their product lines to combat market maturity. Certain gutter guards, for example, can help strain and channel water into catchment systems. Rain harvesting has long been popular in dry areas of the West and South but is growing in popularity elsewhere in the US. While some homebuilders add rain harvesting equipment to create more environmentally friendly residences, in most cases these systems are installed by homeowners aiming to reduce water consumption or to be more self-sufficient. Many gutter guard companies are certifying their steel mesh gutter guard, indicating that the water strained by the product is fit for human consumption.
