Report description:

In 2022, at the beginning of the year, major cities in Japan, including Tokyo and Osaka, were forced under quasi-state of emergency, with outlets asked to shorten their opening hours and limit serving alcoholic drinks. After the Japanese government lifted the quasi-state of emergency in all cities in March, people started to venture outside of the home and resumed socialising from that time. Although the economy showed signs of recovery, the number of COVID-19 cases continued to surge throughout...
