Report description:

The current inflationary climate is forcing pet owners to consider limiting their spending or trading down on non-essential products and accessories for their pets. Consumers with lower incomes are more cost-conscious regarding what they spend. Therefore, perceived non-essential items such as clothing, accessories, and bedding are much less in demand than pet food, prompting volume declines in the category. While there was a spike in purchases in 2020, owners are reviewing their spending habits...
