Report description:

The experience of the Coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic has triggered several significant changes in the lifestyles of many consumers in Indonesia. While the intensity of the pandemic ebbed, some of the habits newly formed during the public health crisis were maintained towards the end of the review period. This was especially visible in terms of the habits related to health- and hygiene-conscious behaviour, such as wearing face masks or cleaning and sanitising hands regularly. Even though these h...
