Report description:

In 2022, sales of premium beauty and personal care were not as strong as in 2021 in volume terms. In 2021, with society opening up in the wake of the pandemic, premium beauty and personal care registered a strong recovery, which could not be expected to continue in 2022 when consumer spending was affected by the war in Ukraine and global inflation. The impact was felt in the major premium products category, fragrances, which did not experience the best performance; however, sales were supported...
