Report description:

In 2022, current value sales of cutlery continued to rise in China. Firstly, as many restaurants closed as a result of pandemic restrictions or could only accommodate a limited number of patrons, consumers cooked and ate more frequently at home. As a result, they were in need of more cutlery, including forks, knives, and spoons, to accommodate their increased cooking needs. In addition, greater time spent at home during the pandemic meant that many local consumers were also more likely to notice...
