Courier, express and parcel (CEP) services comprise the delivery of parcels and documents through the land, air, and waterways across various locations. They help deliver non-palletized packages that usually weigh around a hundred pounds collectively. They operate on various business models, such as business-to-business (B2B), customer-to-customer (C2C), and business-to-customer (B2C). They provide value-added services, including express deliveries to retail consumers, government agencies, and business customers. At present, CEP services are gaining traction across the globe due to safe delivery options, cost-effectiveness, and parcel tracking facilities.

Courier, Express and Parcel (CEP) Market Trends:

Rapid urbanization, globalization, and a significant rise in cross-border trade channels are among the key factors positively influencing the market. In addition, increasing the expenditure capacity of individuals and the burgeoning e-commerce industry on account of the shifting consumer preferences towards online shopping is contributing to market growth. In line with this, the rising focus of e-commerce companies on strategic collaborations with CEP providers to deliver products across domestic and international locations is creating a positive market outlook. They are also improving value-added services, which include mobile tracking of products, SMS and e-mail alerts, and recorded call facilities. Furthermore, the growing consumer reliance on smartphones, laptops, tablets, and personal computers (PCs), along with the rising internet penetration, is offering a favorable market outlook. Apart from this, the increasing utilization of advanced digital technologies by the CEP service providers, such as delivery lockers, autonomous vehicles, and drone deliveries, are bolstering the market growth.
