Report description:

In 2022, US demand for tequila (and mezcal) continued its dynamic growth. At the same time, agave prices observed significant increases, driven by this demand, but also by inflationary pressures. This resulted in significant price increases for tequila in Mexico, and the further premiumisation of the category. As a result, companies have invested in making their agave production more efficient. Diageo, for example, introduced the use of drones to monitor the agave plants and identify which ones...
