Report description:

New Zealand continues to experience sustainably high rates of inflation. The causes of this inflation are multifaceted, including the Reserve Bank of New Zealand's record-low interest rates at the start of the pandemic, supply chain disruptions, rising logistics costs, a weakening NZ dollar, and a chronic labour shortage. These factors have led to increased costs for imported goods and goods made with imported ingredients. Additionally, food prices have been rising at the fastest rate since 1989...
