Report description:

Computers and peripherals are expected to be the worst performing consumer electronic in 2023, with double-digit volume decline. Part of the decline is related to surge in spending on computers and peripherals during the early days of the pandemic, when people were confined to home. As such, there is no need to upgrade these devices yet. At the same time, continuing inflation is expected to reduce consumer purchasing power even further and this is putting a further strain on volume sales.
