Report description:

Consumer demand for health products made from natural ingredients is already well developed in Ireland, and this trend supports sales of herbal/traditional products in 2023. Consumers tend to use these products for minor ailments, but will shift to non-herbal, medicinal products for more serious issues. More people have started to regularly use these products since the pandemic, as part of an effort to strengthen their natural defences. However, demand in some categories has since fallen, initia...
