Adoption of Blockchain and Other Advanced Technologies in Employee Screening Fuels South America Employment Screening Services Market

Companies in the employee screening services market can offer personalized services tailored to the needs of today's tech-savvy businesses with the integration of blockchain in their applications. Blockchain technology is developing quickly with a rise in the use cases and demand areas of blockchain. Adopting blockchain technology enables companies to meet regulatory concerns and customer demands. The technology helps reduce documentation and compliance costs.

Integrating blockchain technology into employee screening solutions and services benefits employers through secured payroll, protected employee data, eliminating candidate-record verification, and streamlining onboarding. The technology has the potential to help recruiters authenticate candidate credentials in a highly secure way and reduces the probability of certificates and accolades being faked or altered. As per a survey conducted by HireRight LLC in 2017, 85% of HR professionals found false data on candidate resumes. Blockchain technology helps overcome challenges associated with detecting such alterations during the screening process. Moreover, implementing blockchain allows recruiters to secure candidate details and access verified data from one platform, which saves the money spent in the screening process. Hence, the growing adoption of blockchain technology is an emerging trend in the South America employment screening services market.

South America Employment Screening Services Market Overview

The employment screening services market in South America is segmented into Brazil, Argentina, and the Rest of SAM. The employment screening services market in South America is anticipated to grow significantly in the coming years. Brazil is the most mature market in the South American continent, investing substantial amounts in various industries. The Brazilian government has acted leniently in formulating a comprehensive data privacy law over the years. However, specific laws comprise privacy components. According to Brazilian law, an employer is entitled to conduct background checks with the candidate's consent and is liable for discrimination if he denies a job based on a background check.
