Report description:

In 2023, overall retail volume sales of butter and spreads are projected to see positive growth, albeit driven by the performance of margarine and spreads. Conversely, there is expected to be a drop in retail volume sales of butter, as well as a further decrease in cooking fats. The anticipated decrease in butter demand coincides with a notable reduction in butter production. The downturn in butter can also be attributed to export bans that came into effect in May 2022, as well as a significant...
