Television (TV) services refer to technical one-way transmission programming and on-demand streaming facility that enables subscribers to access and watch various entertainment and informational content, including news, videos, and music. These channels are usually broadcasted by television service providers using multiple delivery platforms, such as digital terrestrial and satellite broadcast and internet protocol television (IPTV). TV services provide a range of on-demand shows and channels, allow individuals to change subscriptions based on preferences, and offer pay-per-view content, including movie releases and sports events. On account of these properties, TV services are used by individuals to stream shows without any technical disruption. At present, they are commercially differentiated into public and commercial broadcaster types.

Television Services Market Trends:

The rapid digitalization of the media and entertainment industry, the increasing usage of TV sets in respective households to stream on-demand high-definition (HD) video and audio content, and the shifting consumer inclination toward IPTV are primarily driving the market growth. In line with this, the rising internet connectivity and ongoing viewership of various over-the-top (OTT), subscription, and advertorial-based content, especially during the COVID-19 pandemic, is acting as another growth-inducing factor. Additionally, the advent of smart, internet-connected TV sets, along with the integration of the Internet of Things (IoT) to stream on-demand shows through other electronic devices, are supporting the market growth. This is further influenced by the widespread adoption of augmented reality (AR) and virtual reality (VR) technologies to attain an immersive experience while consuming digital content. Moreover, ongoing investments by leading companies on commercial TV broadcasting channels to generate revenue through ads and increase the show television rating point (TRP) is propelling the market growth.
