Rapid Growth in Contract Manufacturing and Lyophilization Services Fuel Europe Lyophilization Services for Biopharmaceuticals Market

The biopharmaceuticals market continues to expand worldwide, which can be the primary growth driver for the pharmaceutical industry. Biopharmaceutical parenteral manufacturing has expanded recently as more therapeutic biologics have been approved. Biotechnology companies outsource from contract manufacturing organizations (CMOs) to meet their fill-and-finish needs and reduce the risk of microbial contamination. Biopharma companies depend on contract manufacturing organizations (CMOs) to provide capacity and capabilities as needed.

Setting up in-house lyophilization capabilities and operations requires specialized equipment and expertise, which is expensive and time-consuming. However, outsourcing is cheaper and increases the efficiency of manufacturing processes. Additionally, it allows biotechnology companies to redirect resources to other areas. Thus, drug developers and biopharmaceutical companies outsource such operations to CMOs to save overall production and yield cost. A few years ago, the CMO industry was a niche service market, offering additional manufacturing capacity or specific services to biotechnology companies. As the biotechnology industry shifts from large-scale production to niche and targeted therapies (personalized medicine), the demand for flexible operational capabilities, production scales, and multiple-product operations is rising. Owing to all these factors, the inclination toward CMOs is growing. One such CMO that provides specialized facilities and dedicated lines for lyophilization operations is Jubilant HollisterStier Contract Manufacturing & Services. The CMO offers sterile fill/finish of Phase I through a commercial sterile injectable and a full suite of lyophilization services. To keep up with the growing demand for its services, Jubilant installed a new 385-square-foot lyophilizer. Thus, the rising capability and availability of biopharma CMOs fuel the lyophilization services for biopharmaceuticals market growth.
