Report description:

After declining in 2022, overall retail volume sales of cooking ingredients and meals in Croatia are set to increase moderately in 2023. This recovery is partly explained by the gradual easing of inflationary pressures linked to the global recovery from the pandemic and Russia's invasion of Ukraine, which has helped to temper unit price hikes to some extent. Nonetheless, inflation remains high, not least due to the country's recent adoption of the euro, hence prices have continued to rise sharpl...
