Report description:

While baked goods is largely dependent on imported wheat, efforts are being made to provide local alternatives in order to stabilise prices and protect Cameroon from global uncertainties. As such local ingredients such as cassava, plantains, yams, and potatoes are now starting to be used. Among the various bread varieties incorporating local flour alternatives is the baguette, as well as Mumba bread, which is made with potato flour and mainly sold from kiosks. There are also examples of cakes...
