Report description:

In 2022, fruit prices experienced significant growth, due to rising transportation costs and reduced output, while the weather was also not favourable for fruits towards the end of the review period due to cold and rainy weather in the spring and high temperatures and drought during the summer, impacting production output of some fruits. The rising average unit price trend continues in 2023, driven by growth in the retail channel. The fruits with the most significant price increases are primaril...
