Report description:

The South & Central America clinical trials market is expected to grow from US$ 1,794.69 million in 2022 to US$ 2,523.98 million by 2028. It is estimated to grow at a CAGR of 5.8% from 2022 to 2028.

Adoption of Decentralized Clinical Trials and Hybrid Clinical Trials Fuels South & Central America Clinical Trials Market

In decentralized clinical trials (DCT), patients' physical access to hospital-based trial sites is reduced or eliminated. In DCTs, digital technologies are used to enable access of patients to clinical research, remote data collection and monitoring, and communication between investigators and participants. A hybrid clinical trial approach combines home-based and on-site activities, bringing the best patient experience and meeting complex protocol regimes, gaining traction across various therapeutic areas and trial phase journeys. Initially, due to challenges such as patient privacy, data security, regulatory barriers, and complex protocol regimes, the adoption of DCT was affected. However, due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the sponsors of clinical trials adopted decentralized and hybrid clinical techniques for developing drugs. They could not continue with traditional trials as they required in-person visits. Due to the restrictions for travel, the only way to gather data and keep trials going was to work remotely and adopt technology much faster than they would have otherwise. Therefore, decentralization broadens trial access to reach a larger number and potentially a more diverse pool of patients.

Further, hybrid clinical trials allow sponsors to strategically incorporate decentralized clinical trial (DCT) elements into study designs. These trial models offer unprecedented flexibility, so more companies are interested in hybrid trials, and the resulting growth is redefining the industry landscape. According to ObvioHealth, the FDA plans to unveil protocols in 2023 to support the use of DCT methods, inspiring confidence in these components for future clinical research. Thus, the increasing focus on using decentralized and hybrid clinical trials over traditional clinical trial methods is expected to provide lucrative opportunities for the clinical trials market during the forecast period.
