Report description:

The Omicron variant of the COVID-19 virus was resulting in case number spikes across China throughout much of 2022, prompting the authorities to enforce strict lockdown measures due to its zero-COVID policy. As consumers were confined to their homes, they minimised trips to the store and bought large quantities of shelf stable foods. This change in behaviour benefitted volume sales of shelf stable fruit, which accounts for the majority of volume sales in processed fruit and vegetables. This help...
