Report description:

After recording a decline in 2021, retail unit volumes of processed fruit and vegetables packaging returned to growth in 2022. The previous year's decline was largely due to the normalisation in demand following a huge boom in 2020, when consumers stockpiled long-lasting food products amid fears of viral transmission as a result of the pandemic. In 2022, retail unit volumes of major pack types in the category, such as metal food cans and flexible plastic, recorded positive growth rates, although...
