Report description:

The year 2023 witnessed a mild winter and an early onset of warmer summer months in New Zealand, attributed to an El Nino weather system. El Nino typically brings increased westerly winds, more rain in the west, and dry conditions in the east. The warm start to the summer, coupled with extreme weather events, created favourable conditions for insect growth. The record warm September, in particular, contributed to an ideal environment for the proliferation of flies. Conversely, the shift from pre...
