Report description:

The pandemic and economic crisis hit Brazilians hard and created polarisation in consumption habits. Those in lower- income segments were forced to trade down and reduce costs by choosing regional brands or private label options, while consumers of classes A and B were more likely to work remotely, save on outgoings such as transport, and spend more on healthy products that they perceived as supporting their immunity. 2022 was close to a normal year in terms of COVID-19 restrictions in Brazil an...
