Report description:

The global healthcare staffing market is envisioned to garner $89,763.9 million by 2031, growing from $40,080 million in 2021 at a CAGR of 8.9% from 2022 to 2031.

The rise in significant need for healthcare staffing providers has been produced by severe labor supply and demand imbalances, increased clinician turnover, and increased healthcare usage. Hospitals continue to face severe staffing shortages even with the impact of COVID-19. For instance, according to Quartz, 24% of American hospitals reported a severe staffing shortage in January 2021, underscoring the necessity for a quick expansion of the healthcare staffing market. All these factors are estimated to drive market growth and demand during the forecast period.

The working of healthcare staff is stressful as hours are long, and spare time is scarce. It might be difficult to maintain a balance between time spent with patients and time spent on other work. For many healthcare professionals, long hours are normal as in reality the average American employed in the healthcare industry works about 16 more hours per week than the typical American worker. Such factors are estimated to limit the market growth during the forecast period.

Investors find the healthcare staffing industry to be very appealing because they may use their resources and strategic knowledge to assemble the highly competitive decentralized industry. Strategic groupings and private equity firms both see expanding healthcare staffing companies as promising investment targets. Scaling up operations gives businesses a competitive edge, enabling them to take advantage of growing brand recognition, more effective recruiting strategies, technological advancements, and a wider range of service offerings. These factors are driving the global demand for healthcare staffing market share.

The COVID-19 pandemic brought several uncertainties, leading to severe economic losses as various businesses across the world were at a standstill. The COVID-19 pandemic negatively impacted the manufacturing and supply chain & logistics industries. It also adversely affected the healthcare business. The implementation of social distancing norms and the modification of standard operating protocols have impeded the daily operations of several healthcare facilities around the world. The healthcare staffing market is growing as a result of major efforts made by healthcare providers and market stakeholders. The shortage of healthcare employees has created new opportunities for global healthcare providers. During the COVID-19 pandemic, numerous hospitals engaged temporary medical personnel from medical staffing firms.
