Report description:

2023 presented a challenging year for traditional toys and games in the US, with current value sales falling as the category normalised following pandemic demand. Excess inventory in late 2022, the result of weaker than forecast demand, meant that retailers and manufacturers alike started 2023 with unsold goods on the balance sheet. In addition, inflationary pressures left consumers less willing to spend on discretionary categories. All of this took its toll on traditional toys and games, result...
