Report description:

As Chilean families see an increase in their incomes and new products emerge in competing categories, concentrates, often regarded as a budget-friendly option, are generally losing popularity. Powder concentrates, the primary format in the category, was historically favoured by low- and mid-income Chileans when alternatives such as juice and carbonates were less accessible. Now, local consumers have a plethora of alternatives, ranging from flavoured bottled water to a variety of 100% juice in mu...
