Report description:

Freed from the restrictions on movement seen during the pandemic, 2023 saw a surge in consumers dining out. After relying on home-cooked meals during the pandemic, consumers were keen to begin indulging in dining out again, significantly reducing the demand for butter which is used in home cooking and baking. This trend has continued into 2024 with it undermining the retail demand for butter. Additionally, many consumers have been keen to travel internationally which has dealt a further blow to...
