Report description:

With a greater focus on health and nutrition in India, an increasing number of consumers are looking for nutritional value in the foods they consume. This is leading to demand for staple foods that offer something extra, such as fortification, or the addition of functional ingredients. However, with increasingly busy lives, staple foods also need to be convenient. For instance, traditionally, an Indian breakfast generally consisted of cooked food such as idli, dosa, paratha, and upma. However, t...
